Lost His Grip on Joaquin Miller.

The editor of the Corinne Reporter, who has indulged himself in all sorts of romantic fancies about the "Poet of the Sierras," had them all rudely scattered to the winds the other day by a sight of the poet as he passed through that place, and thus discusses about this "rude awakening:"

"This genius, and scion of the melancholy muse, was a passenger on the express going east from here this morning. A glimpse at Joaquin, accoutered in tangled, unkempt hair, and habiliments of fendal cut, to say nothing of his general get-up, upset many romantic notions which we have enjoyed concerning him and his disjointed glory. How much mortal ugliness could be found to flux with the sweetness of poetry, 'puzzles the will,' and makes us wish that we had escaped the excruciating agony of looking upon the self-rising rhymster. That one spectacle knocked the wind out of all our exaggerated opinions of the form, shape and features of Mr. Miller; and, just as when we first visited a menagerie, to find the elephant smaller than sixteen churches piled up in a heap, so was it to-day, that a thousand dreamy hallucinations were scattered to the four winds of heaven, by a single peep at the 'bard of the sigh-ears.' We hope never to look upon him or his like again. Good-bye Joaquin. Go East and ride your Pegasus through the corn-fields. From and after this date we'll write our own poetry."
